

ISN Justice Leadership Conference
How can the Ignatian Family Respond to the Current Economic Reality?
Loyola University Chicago

July 17-19, 2009

The media continues to be flooded with stories of the economic crisis. The majority of the country is feeling the pressures of budget cuts, high unemployment rates, housing foreclosures, and services to those most in need are under significant pressure. In response, directors of works, educators, campus ministers, and concerned individuals from the Detroit, Wisconsin, and Chicago Provinces of the Society of Jesus will gather Friday evening July 17th thru Sunday morning, July 19th to reflect and discuss the local impact of the economic crisis on the upper mid-western region and identify ways the faith community and Ignatian family can respond. The conference is co-sponsored by the Ignatian Solidarity Network and Loyola University Chicago.

Scheduled Speakers include:

- Kim Bobo, Founder and Executive Director of the Interfaith Worker Justice
- Rev. Dan Hartnett, S.J., Philosophy faculty member at Loyola University Chicago and rector of the LUC Jesuit Community
- Mary Jo Bane, Ph.D., Practicing Professor of Public Policy and Management at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government
- John Neafsey PsyD, Practicing Clinical Psychologist, adjunct faculty member of the Theology Department at Loyola University Chicago
- Phil Nyden Ph.D., Professor of Sociology and Director of the Center for Urban Research and Learning at Loyola University Chicago
- Representatives of community based organizations and Ignatian ministries from the region
